Mr. Ingalls then discussed at some length the money question. The Democrats claim to be the friends of the world has ever seen. Mr. Ingalls then The effrontery of the Democracy in claiming to be the greenback party is insurpassed. Mr. Ingalls voted for the coinage of the silver dollar, and for the act to make greenbacks receivable at par ties. Had the latter measure been adopted, the effect would have been to place gold and silver in circulation, and our circulation would have been increased to $1,000,000,000. This did not happen because Tom Ewing and his Democratic friends in the house opposed and killed the bill. The absurdity of those who demand absolute money was then shown up. A piece of paper purporting to be a dollar is no more money than a paper with the name John Bay written on it is John Bay. If we have flat money we must have flat steers, absolute sacks of flour, and papers on which is written, congress, to whom he propounded the questions: How shall we get this mon-
